

Southern Cattail: Typha domingensis

Southern Cattail is found in shallow, fresh to slightly brackish waters of ponds, streams, marshes and ditches throughout most of the Northern Hemisphere. Various birds such as rails, bitterns, ducks and red-winged blackbirds nest in these plants. Cattail was often utilized for food by many first peoples of North America.

